By A Customer Now I know exactly what to do to make sure my family gets most of my estate - instead of the IRS! Thank you, Dr. Recer, (or should I say "Santa Claus" because this is the best gift I received all year), for writing this wonderful, helpful book.

A Plain English guide to estate planning. Keep your family's money where it belongs - in your family. This easy to read, understandable how-to book will give you a solid grounding in the fundamentals to help you translate your wishes to your attorney or trust officer. The Three Secret Words of Estate Planning, Living Revocable Trusts, Wills, Premarital Agreements: financial tools useful only if clearly understood and implemented. The fun quizzes at the end of each chapter help the reader understand more of what he or she has just read.

From the Publisher Presenting over 100 seminars per year and having conducted thousands of personal estate planning sessions with the seminar attendees who ask to meet with him, Dan Recer probably has more direct experience in client contact than any estate planning professional in America. Applying the wit, humor and clarity that have epitomized his seminars for over 20 years, Dr. Recer has written an engaging and useful book that shows how lay people can grasp the elements of estate planning. Using his system, they can design their own plan that will avoid the unhappy circumstances that surround so many family plans. The last thing you want to leave your children is a fuss and a fight. It is almost impossible to remedy the problems of poor estate planning. Families still pay far more taxes and create far more ill-will than can be undone. Far better that families read and heed the simple solutions Dan so clearly presents in this wonderful, readable book. Unlike most financially-oriented books, this one illustrates each concept with one of the multitude of stories Dan has gleaned from his thousands of personal estate planning sessions. Instead of quoting lengthy paragraphs from the IRS Rules and Regulations, Dan applies the truths of the Code using real-life, true stories that he lived when meeting with families in the 25 states where he has conducted seminars. As a former college Vice President, a former technical sales executive and a former Presidential Appointee in the federal government, Dan Recer has a broad-based background. Calling upon all his experience in these roles, he has created a system that allows lay people to understand and to apply estate planning devices that save their hard-earned money and avoid years of family-rending misunderstanding and heartache. Every Mother-in-Law in America will find helpful ideas in the pages of this book. All Fathers-in-Law will find Dan's estate planning principles to be practical, understandable and valuable. Whether you want to disinherit your Son-in-Law ... or to give him the key to the family vault ..., the Recer system will show you how to do it in the most cost-effective, private and expeditious way. The modest investment of time and money required to read this book pales in comparison to the economic and emotional savings inherent in its pages. In addition to serving as a text for lay people, this book will be a valuable resource for all financial professionals; it will show them how to translate the complexities of estate planning into terms their clients can easily understand and apply. Dr. J. Dan Recer has plowed new ground by demystifying the complexities of estate planning and by translating the arcane professional Legalese into the everyday language of American business and society. About the Author As an educator, Dan Recer received his Ph. D. from the University of Oklahoma and served several colleges, universities, hospitals, associations and government agencies in administrative and consultative capacities. As President of the American Institute for Cancer Research, he initiated that organization's planned giving program. Devoting his full time to estate planning consulting in 1987, he has conducted seminars in 25 states, sponsored by over 100 nonprofit organizations. A Civil War buff, Dan spends his weekends touring historic battle sites. Excerpt. Reprinted by permission. All rights reserved. During a day of conducting personal estate planning sessions in a small town on the Chesapeake Bay, I met with a woman whom I will call Nan Hill. She told me, My husband, Bob, and I have worked all our lives to get what we have. We started out renting one small farm. After several years we were able to buy it ... and over the years and with much hard work, we have acquired additional land. She concluded, We now have four farms. How can I help you? I asked. We have four daughters, she said, all married. So, we also have four sons-in-law. Then, as if the very words pained her body and soul, she said, We get along fine with all of these daughters and these sons-in-law ... except for one son-in-law ... and we don't like him very well. She paused, finally adding, In fact, we despise him. Why is that? I asked. When my husband got hurt on the tractor and was hospitalized with his injuries, we know that this son-in-law went to a neighbor's house and told them that he wished Bob would go ahead and die ... so he would get his farm. Dr. Recer, can you tell me how to be sure he never gets one of our farms?
