From Oxford University Press : Law in Public Health Practice before purchasing it in order to gage whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised Law in Public Health Practice:

Public health practice subsumes epidemiology, medicine, law, biostatistics, microbiology, environmental studies and many other disciplines, all in the context of governmental practices and politics. Continually changing health threats, technologies, science, and demographics require public health professionals to have an understanding of law sufficient to address complex new problems. Law in Public Health is designed to meet the need of public health practitioners, lawyers, health-care providers, law and public health educators and students. The book is written jointly by experts in law and in public health. The first eleven chapters give a thorough review of the legal basis and authorities for core elements of public health practice. The remaining nine chapters focus on high-priority as well as emerging areas of law and public health, including genomics, communicable diseases, public health emergencies, reproductive health, tobacco prevention, and environmental, injury, and occupational issues.

"The organization of the book, with a series of substantive analyses of a range of public health areas gives a good snapshot of issues... Authors have approached their areas with a clear expression of why they are urgent and necessary." --Australian and New Zealand Journal of Public Health "...the book makes an important and needed contribution to educating professionals while invigorating and advancing the partnership between law and public health." --Journal of Legal Medicine "The reader is invited to improve their understanding of the legal principles underlying public health practice; that is to say how law may be applied to improve the health of people. And after reading the book, this aspiration is reached, especially the discovery of the wide range of daily activities of public health where the legal dimension is present." --Journal of Epidemiology and Community Health Online "We need the law to assist in the protection of our health and welfare. This book shows us how." --J R Coll Physicians About the Author Mark A. Rothstein is at University of Louisville School of Medicine. Karen L. Foster is at National Center for Environmental Health, Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, GA.
